NEWS RELEASE

Price adjustment of The Japan Times/The New York Times and The Japan Times On Sunday

Tokyo, June 14, 2019 — The Japan Times, Ltd. (Chiyoda-ku, Tokyo. Representative: Takeharu Tsutsumi) is announcing a price adjustment for its print edition. The monthly subscription price of The Japan Times / The New York Times will be adjusted to ¥5,660 (up from the current ¥5,143). The price of a single issue of the daily paper will be ¥230 (up from ¥210) and for The Japan Times On Sunday (the Sunday edition), the price will be ¥280 (up from ¥260). We take great pride in our original news reporting and the features written by our staff writers and contributors. In our ongoing efforts to bring you more relevance and insight into the topics and issues of the day, we will continue to expand our coverage of current events in Japan, as well as implement more innovations and additions to our print and digital content.

We seek your continued patronage and support.

Going deeper and wider
Added value from The Japan Times
Beginning July 2019

Opinion and analysis
With an expanded stable of contributors, we'll be offering more expert analysis and big picture commentary on the issues impacting Japan and Asia.

Regional
We'll be bringing up our national and local coverage with more original content, in addition to stories straight out of local media.

The Argument
Issues are rarely black and white. To better understand the conversation in Japan, we're launching a new page featuring experts with contrasting views to break it down and hash it out.

Foreign workers
As the nation adjusts to changing immigration policies, we'll be maintaining our focus on issues affecting foreign workers in Japan, ranging from their impact on businesses and the economy to their adjustment to Japanese society.

Explainers
In addition to reporting the straight news, we'll be regularly providing readers with all the background and context required to understand key issues in a timely fashion.

Insider Report
As the country's business scene changes, we'll be asking industry insiders to provide the latest news, trends and workings of Japanese companies.

Deep Dive
To give you the best results and right channels to tell stories that break through the surface of Japan, we'll be through our long-lead stories with compelling photography and video or our regular behind-the-scenes podcast, Deep Dive.

Disaster portal
Disasters can strike at any time. To keep you informed during emergencies, we are preparing a portal site, to be launched by summer 2019. Dedicated to natural disasters and related related information.
